

Strengthen Taxpayer Rights in Judicial Proceedings

#50 REPEAL FLORA: GIVE TAXPAYERS WHO CANNOT PAY THE SAME ACCESS TO JUDICIAL REVIEW AS THOSE WHO CAN

Present Law

IRC § 6212 requires the IRS to issue a “notice of deficiency” before assessing certain liabilities. When the IRS issues a notice of deficiency, IRC § 6213 authorizes the taxpayer to petition the U.S. Tax Court within 90 days (or 150 days if the notice is addressed to a person outside the U.S.) to review the IRS determination.

IRC §§ 6201 and 6671(a) authorize the IRS to assess other liabilities, including so-called “assessable” penalties (e.g., penalties codified in IRC §§ 6671-6725), without first issuing a notice of deficiency. Assessable penalties are not computed by reference to a tax deficiency. For example, penalties under IRC §§ 6721 and 6707 for failure to file various information returns are assessable penalties. A taxpayer generally may not obtain judicial review of assessable penalties in the Tax Court.

28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1) provides that a taxpayer may sue in a U.S. District Court or the U.S. Court of Federal Claims to recover “any sum” that the taxpayer believes has been erroneously assessed or collected. In Flora v. United States, 362 U.S. 145 (1960), however, the U.S. Supreme Court held that, with limited exceptions, a taxpayer must have “fully paid” the assessment (called the “full payment rule”) before suing in these courts. In contrast, IRC § 7422(j) provides that the U.S. District Courts and the U.S. Court of Federal Claims “shall not fail to have jurisdiction” to determine the “estate tax liability of such estate (or for any refund with respect thereto) solely because the full amount of such liability has not been paid by reason of an election under section 6166” to pay the liability in installments.

Under IRC § 7422(a) the taxpayer must make a timely administrative claim for refund before filing suit. Assuming the claim is timely, IRC § 6511(b)(2) generally limits a taxpayer’s recovery to amounts paid within two years (or, in some cases, within three-years plus any extension of time to file) before the date of the claim.¹⁵⁹

Under IRC §§ 6330 and 6320, the Tax Court may review an assessed liability if the IRS issues levies or liens to collect an assessment and the taxpayer requests a Collection Due Process (CDP) hearing. However, IRC §§ 6330(c)(2)(B), 6320(c), and Treas. Reg. §§ 301.6320-1(e)(3)A-E2 and 301.6330-1(e)(3)A-E2, provide that the Tax Court may do so only if the taxpayer did not receive a notice of deficiency and did not have an opportunity to raise the dispute in an administrative appeal. In practice, the IRS generally provides an opportunity for an administrative appeal.

Under 11 U.S.C. § 505(a)(1), a bankruptcy court “may” review a tax dispute, but it generally will not review tax issues unless resolution of the dispute would benefit the taxpayer’s other creditors.

¹⁵⁹ To be timely, IRC § 6511(a) generally requires that an administrative claim must be filed within the later of (i) three years from when the original return was filed or (ii) two years from when the tax was paid. If the claim is filed within the three-year period, then IRC § 6511(b)(2)(A) provides that the taxpayer can only recover amounts paid within three years, plus any extension of time to file, before the date of the claim. Otherwise, IRC § 6511(b)(2)(B) provides that the taxpayer can only recover amounts paid within two years before the date of the claim.

Under IRC § 7803(a)(3), the Commissioner is required to ensure that IRS employees act in accord with certain rights (known as the “Taxpayer Bill of Rights”), including the right to appeal a decision of the Internal Revenue Service in an independent forum.

Reasons for Change

Consistent with the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, all taxpayers should have an opportunity to obtain judicial review of adverse IRS determinations. Moreover, taxpayers who cannot pay what the IRS says they owe in order to challenge an adverse determination should have the same opportunities as wealthier taxpayers who can pay.

Under current law, there are circumstances in which taxpayers do not have a right to judicial review. Significantly, assessable penalties are not subject to judicial review unless the taxpayer is wealthy enough to fully pay.

Even taxpayers who fully pay may lose the opportunity to recover a portion of their payments if they pay in installments. Payments made more than two years before a taxpayer fully pays and files a refund claim generally cannot be recovered. Thus, a taxpayer who is not affluent enough to pay his alleged debt within two years will lose the right to request a refund of his early payments, even if he eventually pays in full and the court agrees with him on the merits of the refund claim.

Even when the IRS sends the notice of deficiency to low income taxpayers, they may not have a realistic opportunity for judicial review. A TAS study found that when the IRS sent an audit notice to those claiming the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC)—a refundable tax credit for the working poor—almost 40 percent did not understand what the IRS was questioning, and only about half of the respondents felt that they knew what they needed to do. Thus, many are also unlikely to understand whether and how to timely petition the Tax Court.

Since the Flora case was decided, the problems created by the full payment rule have grown while the reasons for it have faded. Specifically, whether judicial review occurs before or after payment is not as important to the government as it once was. Moreover, in 1960 when Flora was decided, there were only four assessable penalties. Today, there are over 50. Thus, the IRS’s authority to assess penalties that cannot be reviewed has increased. In addition, the EITC was not enacted until 1975. It brought the working poor into the tax system by giving them tax benefits. Thus, the full payment rule increasingly erodes the right to appeal an IRS decision in an independent forum for tens of millions who were not a part of the tax system in 1960.

The National Taxpayer Advocate recommends that Congress provide all taxpayers with a realistic opportunity to obtain judicial review of adverse IRS determinations without regard to ability pay.

Recommendations¹⁶⁰

While a simple solution might be to repeal the full payment rule, Congress should also consider one or more of the following options:¹⁶¹

- Amend 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1) to clarify that the full payment rule only applies in cases where the taxpayer has received a notice of deficiency.

- Treat a taxpayer as having fully paid a disputed amount for purposes of the full payment rule when the taxpayer has paid some of it (including by refund offset) and either (a) the IRS has classified the account as currently not collectible due to economic hardship or (b) the taxpayer has entered into an agreement to pay the liability in installments.¹⁶²
- Authorize the U.S. Tax Court to review liabilities where the taxpayer has not received a deficiency notice (e.g., assessable penalties) in a manner that parallels the deficiency process. Alternatively, expand the Tax Court's jurisdiction to review these liabilities in connection with CDP appeals, even if the taxpayer has had an opportunity for an administrative appeal.

¹⁶² As noted above, a similar rule applies to estates that elect to pay in installments. See IRC § 7422(j).
